About UCLES

The University of Cambridge Local Examinations Syndicate (UCLES) is a department of the University of Cambridge. UCLES was established in 1858 and has been providing exams in English as a Foreign Language (EFL) since 1913. Today, UCLES is a world leader in educational assessment with examination centres in over 150 countries. Every year, more than one and a half million people take Cambridge EFL exams.

The Cambridge EFL exams are run by UCLES EFL Division, which is responsible for ensuring the professional standards of the exams, carrying out a continuing programme of research and development and providing advice and support to centres.

Cambridge International Examinations Division provides school qualifications such as IGCSE and A Level as well as a range of Career and Skill Awards in such key areas as Business, IT and Thinking Skills.

Association of Language Testers in Europe (ALTE)

UCLES is a member of the Association of Language Testers in Europe, which exists to develop and implement common standards of language assessment throughout Europe. ALTE currently has 23 members, representing 18 languages, with a Secretariat currently based at UCLES. ALTE has been awarded several European Community grants to develop language qualifications in the European context.

European Association of Quality Language Services (EAQUALS)

UCLES is an associate member of the European Association of Quality Language Services (EAQUALS), an organisation which aims to promote and guarantee high standards in modern language teaching institutions.

Products or Services:

A wide range of general education, vocational and English as a Foreign Language examinations, certificates and diplomas.

Dear Ruben

I was glad to meet you last night at the Thai UK Alumni Launch and to hear that you may be offered a senior position in The Philippines.

As I mentioned, we are keen to expand our exams there and it looks as if The British Council may step back.
